[Basingstoke, UK] – Aquatec is thrilled to announce that our R&D Electronic Engineer, Iván Alonso, has been nominated as a finalist for the prestigious Rising Star Award at this year's Subsea Expo, to be held on Wednesday 21, 2024. This award recognises the most promising talent under 35 in the underwater sector.

Iván's innovative work developing advanced electronic systems for subsea applications has garnered significant recognition within the industry and has been instrumental in advancing Aquatec's mission. His dedication and expertise have played a crucial role in providing high-precision instruments that are not only technologically advanced but also crucial for protecting and understanding our marine environment.

A Rising Star in Subsea Technology

The Rising Star Award nomination is a testament to Iván's exceptional talent and his potential to significantly impact the future of subsea technology. Aquatec takes great pride in nurturing the abilities of young professionals like Iván, and his achievements reflect the company's dedication to fostering a culture of excellence and developing solutions that address the challenges of underwater exploration and conservation.

Looking Forward to the Future

Regardless of the final outcome of the award selection, Aquatec is incredibly proud of Iván's accomplishment and excited for his future endeavours within our team. We remain steadfast in our commitment to supporting innovation and young professionals like Iván as they contribute to all sectors involved in our subsea world.
