[Basingstoke, UK] – Aquatec, a pioneering developer of innovative subsea instrumentation, has announced the appointment of Paul Griffiths as the new Sales Manager for its Subsea Integrity Division.

In his new role, Paul will oversee sales operations and foster client relationships for Aquatec's Subsea Integrity solutions and products, which are at the forefront of subsea monitoring technology. These advanced modular systems and devices are designed to monitor and preserve the integrity of underwater assets, addressing critical demands in industries such as oil and gas, renewable energy, and marine construction. These solutions play a crucial role in ensuring underwater assets' longevity, reliability, and safety by providing essential monitoring and data services.

"We are delighted to welcome Paul Griffiths to our team," said Andy Smerdon, Managing Director at Aquatec. "His solid sector experience brings valuable expertise to the team, strengthening our position in the market."

"I'm excited to join Aquatec and contribute to the growth of its Subsea Integrity Division," said Paul. "The company's innovative approach to subsea monitoring aligns perfectly with the industry's needs for reliable, cutting-edge solutions."

Aquatec's award-winning Subsea Integrity division specialises in advanced solutions for monitoring and maintaining the integrity of subsea structures. Their comprehensive range of technologies enables effective structural monitoring and health assessment, cathodic protection, and environmental condition tracking for assets such as offshore wind farms, oil and gas platforms, pipelines, and other marine infrastructure.
